Summary

This article analyses Bjorn Hocke's vocabulary and places it in the context of National Socialist and fascist rhetoric. It highlights recurring terms and motifs such as Tat-Elite, Bewegungspartei, Entartung, Degeneration, Dekadenz, Verfall, Deutschland erwacht, tausendjaehrige Zukunft, Volksverderber, gesundes Volksempfinden and disease metaphors around Keime and Feuchtbiootope.

The article is relevant for the repository because it treats Hocke's language not as isolated provocation, but as a structured vocabulary field with clear historical continuities: the Volk appears as an organic body, decline is framed as degeneration, and political struggle as awakening or healing.

Analytical markers

- NS vocabulary continuity
- Volk as organism
- Disease and hygiene metaphors
- Historical revisionism
- Organisational and movement language
- Enemy as contamination / infection

Key content blocks

Relevance for the repository

This source is a strong analytical reference for the new thematic block NS-Sprache / Volkskörper-Rhetorik. It supports later findings on medicalized politics, ethnicized peoplehood, and the use of historically burdened vocabulary in AfD-related discourse.
