

Nazi Racial Teaching Guidelines

- Canonical URL: <https://research.calvin.edu/german-propaganda-archive/erblehre.htm>
- Archived access date: 2026-07-05
- Source type: translated research archive / secondary source with primary-text excerpts
- Bibliographic source: Karl Bareth and Alfred Vogel, Erblehre und Rassenkunde fuer die Grund- und Hauptschule (2nd ed., 1937)
- Tracking parameters removed: yes

Summary

This archive page presents translated excerpts from a 1937 Nazi school guide on heredity and racial science. The material argues that humans are divided into unequal races, frames heredity as a political principle, promotes selection and the elimination of hereditary illness, and treats blood purity and race mixing as central political concerns.

The page is directly relevant for the repository because it documents classic Nazi biologist and medicalized political language: people are sorted into valuable and less valuable groups, hereditary illness is treated as a burden, sterilization is framed as a state necessity, and race mixing is presented as decline.

Analytical markers

- Volkskoerper / blood-body thinking
- Purity of blood
- Sterilization and selection
- Racial hierarchy
- Medicalization of politics
- Exclusion of minorities and less valuable groups

Key content blocks

- Heredity and racial science as school instruction
- Elimination of hereditary illness
- Maintaining the purity of blood
- Race mixing and decline
- Sterilization as a purported state measure

Relevance for the repository

This source is useful as a comparative reference for NS vocabulary and biologist political metaphors, especially where later AfD-related texts invoke healing, disease, Volkskoerper, purity, degeneration, or similar frames.